This is a presentation of qualitative data collected from a private health science college in the midwest, USA, during a single semester. The topic relates to the use of the Microsoft OneNote software program to facilitate collaboration and communication interdepartmentally, especially within an online RN-BSN program. Literature was collected and reviewed from varying databases such as ERIC and CINAHL on the previous use of OneNote and similar software applications for nursing faculty collaboration. The research was conducted in a qualitative manner utilizing individual interviews and focus groups. Results will be presented as a workshop or poster.
