

4th International Conference on Nursing & Healthcare

October 05-07, 2015 San Francisco, USA

Practices advanced care in France, point of view of users and the policy response

Letourneau Dominique^{1,2}

¹Creteil University School of Medicine, France

²Foundation of the Future, France

For 10 years the France is engaged in an in-depth study on the evolution of its health system. The issue of collaboration between doctors and nurses is redesigned on the mode of practice advanced care. The ageing of the population, medical demography and technological development accelerate this change. Once the principles lay down, the actors struggle to agree to their implementation as professional hierarchies are debates. But most importantly, this has remained a debate between specialists. We drove the first survey to query the French population on this development concerned first. The results are very interesting because they show the lack of information and overall expressed objections. Surprisingly, it is those who would be most recipients (elderly, isolated people in rural areas) which are more reluctant. With the issue of advanced care practices, it is the entire process of the transfer of nursing education to the University which is at stake with the prospect of clinical masters and then PhD in care as exists in many countries. The development of clinical training at the University will feed nursing research and contribute to the knowledge on the evolution of the practices of care for the benefit of users.

Biography

Letourneau Dominique is a Chairman of the Foundation of the Future (applied medical research recognized of public utility foundation). He is an Associate Professor in Creteil University School of Medicine. He is also the Head of Master Management of health care organizations since 2008 and previously the Director of the Institute engineering of health (1996-2007). He has about thirty articles published in the professional press health and social and more than forty communications in conferences on health and training issues, two books and various reports. He is also a member of several committees and ministerial working groups in the field of health and training as a qualified person.

dletourneau@fondationdelavenir.org

Notes: