To develop a strategy for a global innovation for traditional medicine*Peace IbiamNigerian Institute of Homeopathy, Nigeria*

Traditional medicine practice has evolved tremendously over some years past, several policy and regulating guideline have emanated to provide a frame work for national and international integration in the practice of traditional medicine. Example of this was championed by World Health Organization (WHO), whose aim is to evaluate and explore the changing innovation landscape in traditional medicine across countries with the rapid growing field of study. Innovation in traditional medicine has also taken his tool in Africa with an advancement of the use of phytomedicine in the treatment of diseases, especially priority diseases such as HIV, STDs, MALARIA, HYPERTENTION and others. In Nigeria, there are several advances with the use of herbal therapeutic modality in the treatment of diseases.

These challenges when fully addressed early will help the future development and standardization of synergy in phytomedicine, Therefore, this article investigated the developments of traditional medicine in Nigeria as it appropriates conventional and modern innovative infrastructures to enhance efficacy, acceptance and development. Traditional medicine is very critical for growth given its spread use in developing societies somewhat leading to its increasing capacity to contribute to growth and development in Nigeria/Africa against the backdrop of Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). The goal is to enhance the knowledge and exploring innovation in traditional medicine and practice in Nigeria, Hence, The study was conducted in Nigeria, Primary and secondary data were collected. While secondary data were gathered through learned articles, newspaper, official documents and so on, ethnographic and survey research approaches were adopted in primary data collection- through In- depth Interviews (IDIs). Mode of data collection, one on one interaction and questioners. Result; Trado- modern medicine is, in some ways, contributing to development, health care, job creation, economic activities, and development in Nigeria and Africa.
