Introduction

This paper contains a collection of Radio Television Malaysia (RTM) interviews with members of MHS to commemorate the 43rd anniversary of independence. The theme 'The Meaning of Independence' (Erti Kemerdekaan) will always be discussed when we celebrate our independence but there are times we feel its significance tend to lose its gloss and patriotic fervor especially among the younger generation. Malaysian Historical Society feels the old interviews are still relevant as they serve as supplementary record to the historic and arduous journey to independence achieved 54 years ago. The paper is called 'Glimpses of Our Merdeka' as Malaysian Historical Society humbly realizes that the book contain limitations, namely the articles are short and have no academic pretensions. But they are readable, interesting and personal and should be able to provide rich source and insights into our 'Merdeka' that could well evoke pride and inspirations.

History of Books or Journals

Malaysian Historical Society is conscious of the limitations and constraints of our modern reader who have no time and opportunity to glean on heavy or academic writings in history books or journals. 'Glimpses of Our Merdeka' would be the answer as the articles are brief without losing the essence of the subject matter. Malaysian Historical Society hopes their readers would be stimulated to seek advanced reading on this momentous period which only occurs once in the history of a nation. "Glimpses of Our Merdeka" contains fourteen articles or essays, nine of which were originally the substance of a series of interviews conducted by Radio Television Malaysia (RTM) in August, 2000 at the Head Office of the Malaysian Historical Society/MHS or Persatuan Sejarah Malaysia/PSM at JKR No. 958, Jalan Hose, Kuala Lumpur.

The interviews were part of a RTM programmed called 'The Meaning of Independence' on the occasion of the celebration of Malaysia's Independence on 31st August 2000. The interviews were aired over RTM Radio 4 during the month of August 2000. The series of interviews were with two members of the Council of the MHS and seven members of the Executive Committee of the MHS, each with a specific topic having a bearing on Malaysia's Independence. The original Malay version was translated into English by Encik Mohd Arof Ishak, a member of the Executive Committee MHS. The Seven Wills were delivered by the Malay Rulers at the time when they were attesting their signature to the Agreement to the Constitution of the Federation of Malaya on 5 August 1957.

This book is very important because a publication relating to the country's independence is a valuable one. It is important not only in adding to the collection of thoughts on an event of such great importance to the country, but also in terms of contributing towards developing sense of patriotism and awareness of the labour of the people in creating a unified, independent, and sovereign nation. It is also a show of appreciation for the all-important efforts to provide content to the fact of independence, which would guarantee the preservation of that independence. Those who never had the experience of living during colonial times might think that independence is just a mundane matter. In a way, such thinking may cause us to be neglected on the subject of the importance of defending our independence, more so in the exhilaration over globalisation, and the various subtle pressures, if we are not vigilant enough, will cause a threat to the preservation of our independence, in its truest sense.

Malaysian Historical Society hopes their effort will encourage others to produce better books on Merdeka to meet the needs of our rakyat especially the younger citizens of today. In the foreword, the Prime Minister of Malaysia and President of Malaysian Historical Society, Dato' Sri Najib Tun Abdul Razak also hope more individuals and organisations will produce writings on the subject of our country's independence in the future. This is because the country's history belongs to us all. It lives forever, hence any interested persons may write on their own experiences, readings, and no less important perceptions, interpretations, and thinking. That is what makes history so interesting - a reflection of our lives.
